Question of the Day: Are there any groups of people who should not get the mRNA COVID-19 vaccine? (Source: Harvard Health Publishing; Harvard Medical School)

- There are only a few groups of people who should not get the mRNA vaccine. They include people who:
  - are allergic to any components of the mRNA vaccine, which include polyethylene glycol (PEG) and polysorbate
  - had an allergic reaction within the first 30 minutes after receiving the first dose of an mRNA COVID-19 vaccine
- If you have a history of allergic reactions to other (non-COVID) vaccines or to injectable medications, ask your doctor if it is safe for you to get one of the currently available mRNA vaccines.
- People with weakened immune systems, including those with autoimmune conditions and those taking immune-suppressing treatment, are at increased risk for severe COVID illness. People in these groups can get an mRNA vaccine. However, there may be other safety considerations. If you fall into this category, talk to your doctor about your individual risks and benefits.

- Finally, it is possible that convalescent plasma or monoclonal antibodies, both of which are used to treat COVID-19, could reduce the effectiveness of the vaccine. If you have received either of these treatments, wait 90 days before getting your vaccine.
